THE UNIQUE DINNERS

AN ARTIST IN THE EATING LINE.

A Good Story About a Southern Senator Who is Not Rich.

BILL MORRISON AND THE DUCK

CORRESPONDENCE OF THE DISPATCH ? WASHINGTON, February 3 .- Mr. George C Boldt, who has been selected by the Inaugural Committee to serve the supper at the inaugural ball, was in town the other day making arrangements for his task, which is simply a herculean one. He may have to serve supper for 5,000 people, and perhaps for 15,000 people. The difficulties of his undertaking are self-evident. Mr. Boldt has made name and fame as the proprietor of the Hotel Bellevue, in Philadelphia, where, for the past six years, the dinners of the Clover Club have been held. He is to Philadelphia what Delmonico is to New York, and the Inaugural Committee feel ball could not have been placed in better hands.

Some of the most unique and brilliant dinners ever given in this or any other they were noticed by two Germans. One country have been given at the quiet and of them said to the other: "You see dot fel- physician of the institution, pronounces it petite Hotel Bellevue. Boldt is an artist as well as an epicure, and he has developed some exquisite artistic and material ef-

"Perhaps the costliest dinner I ever served," he said to me, "was the one given to Franklin B. Gowan, in February, 1882, by the railroad presidents of New York and Philadelphia. Mr. Gowan was then the dent of the Reading Railroad. Mr. W H Vanderbilt was one of the 30 quests. I remember. The name of Mr. Gowan termed of Jacqueminot rosebuds, appeared on the wall of the room in letters 10 high. Red-birds were served which had been kept on ice for ten months, and the Roman punch was brought to the table in the tenders of miniature railway trains, one of which was placed before each guest. The tiny trains were set upon steel rails, and the engine and cars bore the initials of the Reading Railroad. The dinner cost $50 a

"In that same year Mr. Clarence Lewis gave a dinner in honor of Miss Agnes Rob-erts, the niece of the President of the Penn-sylvania Railroad. A dozen of the season's debutantes were present, and I was bidden to produce some quietly startling effects. This is what I did: The dinner was seved in a corner of the large ballroom. The table surrounded by Japanese screens six was an enormous ball of violets. The moment the Sevris coffee-cups were placed on the table a spring was touched. The ball of violets fell apart, exposing a great bunch of La France roses—a ball favor to the guest of honor. In another moment the creens were whisked away; a score of cages containing chirping canary birds were seen hanging from the ceiling; music came from a hidden orchestra, and the ballroom effect was charming and the guests were de-lighted. What had been a cozy diningroom a moment before was changed into a large ballroom without the slightest confusion or noise. The accomplishment of this was a bit theatric, perhaps, but it was very effec-

"In October, 1884, Mr. Clarence H. Moore gave a dinner of 15 covers to Mrs. Richard-son, of London, formerly of Philadelphia. The table was strewn with autumn leaves and chestnut burrs. A different set of elaborately decorated plates was furnished for each course and each plate was an art study. The favors for the ladies were solid silver card cases with the monogram of the recipient engraved on one side and the menu and date or the other. Jeweled scarf pins were given to the men. The dinner cost over $100 for each person.

"Mr. Rodman Wanamaker, in October, 1888 gave an ante-wedding dinner to 18 men. The table was set in a grape arbor in the middle of the largest room in the botel. Two hundred and fifty pounds of grapes were suspended from natural vines. The spartment was illuminated by hundreds of greater promise, artistic, literary, womanly, apartment was illuminated by hundreds of tiny fairy lamps. There was no other light in the room. Large trees were placed against the wall of the room as though growing there. Graveled, serpentine walks, strewed with leaves, led from the central arbor throughout the room. Miniature sum-mer houses abounded, and in another arbor the orchestra was concealed. The result was perfect. All the effect of a dinner in a private vineyard was produced."

Mr. Boldt has given several "Greek" dinners. The prandial customs of the ancients are followed as closely as comfort and convenience will permit. The room is hung with garlands and over the table wreaths and garlands are carelessly thrown. Rugs

Mr. Boldt's collection of china is a very rare and valuable one. The most notable portion of it is the "Crown Head" set of dinner plates. It was painted on his order by Dessard at the Royal Sevres factory, Paris. Each of the 18 plates contains a perfect portrait of a king, queen, prince or princess, and the cost of each plate was the modest sum of $87. They have been used on but four occasions. The first was the Moore dinner; second, the Wanamaker en-Mrs. W. W. Astor, and fourth, for the luncheon given by Mr. George W. Childs to Mrs. Cleveland while she was in Philadelphia attending the Constitutional Cen-tennial Celebration. They are works of art, and the envy of every lover of ceramics.

The Southern members of Congress are notably poor. All of them, to be sure, are not guilty of that greatest of faults (as it is regarded in Washington), but it is the rule rather than the exception. A story is told rather than the exception. A story is told of a well-known Senator from a Southern State which is based on this peculiarity. The Senator was poor-so poor that he found great difficulty getting through his canvass. In his extremity he did not hesitate to borrow a few hundred dollars here and there, probably consoling his conscience with the thought that he was going to Congress not so much for his own good as tor the good of the State and her people. One of the constituents of whom he solicited and obtained a small loan was a farmer not over burdened with this world's goods himself. Of him the Senator obtained $200. He did not think of repaying it and the lender did not think of asking for it.

One day, a year or more after the election, the tarmer's wife found that the store of money was running low. The crops had been bad and the expenses of the amily heavy. She suggested to her husband that be apply to Senator - for the little loan made at the time of the election. The far-mer wrote but he received no reply. He wrote again and received a short note telling him that the Senator was so engressed with public duties that he could not attend to the matter immediately. At length, becoming a little aggravated and being moved to ac-tion by the urging of his wife, he determined to come to Washington. He came, and shortly after his coming he called upon the Senator. He was received in the most effusive manner. The Senator was delighted to see his old friend. Other Senators were passing through the corridors of the Capitol at the time they met. The Senator stopped them. "You must know my old friend," he said to them and introduced them to him. he said to them and introduced them to him. one after another. The next day he took his friend to see the President; took him through the Departments and showed him through the Departments and showed him the most profuse, though inexpensive, at-tention. It was four days after his depart-ure for the Capitol that the farmer returned to his home. His wife greeted him with open arms. "Did you see Senator—?"

"See him?" said the husband. "See him? Why, he took me all over Washington. He took me everywhere." The eulogy continued for a long time When it was concluded, the wife said: "But, John, did you get the $200?" The question seemed to embarrass her husband a little. "To tell you the truth, 'Mandy," he said, "I didn't. To tell you the truth, I loaned the Senator another $200." Colonel Bill Morrison tells a good story at his own expense. He has a red-haired ing prison officials with practical inventions that the feast end of the great quadrennial brother living in Illinois whose custom it and ingenious escapes. His companion insisted that it was his shot that had brought down the game and that it was 30 feet from the ground when it was hit. After a few minutes of argument, they started after the duck and as they returned Mr. Morrison had it in his hand. But he still argued in a rather violent manner that the duck was but eight from the ground when it was shot and that his bullet had brought it down. The second German thereupon spoke to the first. "You say dot's Bill Morrison's bruder?" he asked.

"Yes, dot's him," was the reply. "No, it isn't," said the other. "If dot was Bill Morrison's bruder he don't give a tam whether dot duck been tree feet or tirty feet from de ground—so long he got de

Not long ago the Hon. Matthew Stanley Quay started for Florida. Before his departure he gave the two press associations a formal notification that he would oppose the feet high. The center ornament of the table appointment to office of any one who applied to him for an indorsement before March 4. The reason for the announcement is to be found in the enormous proportions that Senator Quay's mail was beginning to assume before he went away. All of this was brought about in an instant. The effect was charming and the guests were delighted. What had been a cozy dipingroom. capped the climax. He issued his pronunciamento on that. His mail has not sensibty diminished, but his announcement will give him excellent excuse hereafter for getting rid of bores and those to whom he owes nothing, and will not prevent him attending to his friends. A boar's head edorns the center of the table. Roast kid, served whole, is one of the features, and dates and powdered nuts form the desert. The menu is printed in Greek as well as English.

Silk and plush table decoration was first introduced in this country by Mr. Boldt. In referring to dressing a table, he said:

"I look upon the table as Worth looks upon his subject. I throw a lot of silk or other material on it, adjust or crease it until I am satisfied. I pin a bit of ribbon at one point, a silken bow at another; throw a flower here, a leaf there until an artistic and happy result is attained. I sit up nights striving for new ideas."

Edith Ferguson was not one to hide her talents in a napkin. Though her tige, womanly heart was thoroughly responsive to the love and comfort of the home circle, her earnest mature early impelled her to devote herself to a serious life work in the art for which nature had so richly endowed her. the rare poetic appreciation she brought to this the rare poetic appreciation she brought to this branch of art.

Nor were Miss Ferguson's talents confined to pictorial art alone; she could drop the pencil and wield the pen instead, with uncommon skill. Under the nom de plume of "Edna Fletcher" she has from time to time contributed to THE DISPATCH bright, thoughtful letters upon life and nature as seen in her artistic ramblings, besides an occasional modest bit of verse with the true ring in it. These special talents, through which Edith Ferguson touched the world at large, were set in the pure gold of a nobly rounded character and enhanced by many graces of mind and heart, which she freely devoted to those who knew her best and who mourn her most.

The Strange Career and Remarkable Inventions of a Convict

Many Times From Jail,

BUT DEPRAVITY DROVE HIM BACK

Whether Mr. Gerry's bill to provide death-dealing electrical apparatus for the State prisons passes or fails, Warden Durston, of Auburn need not fear that he will is the finest man in the country. He took me up to the White House, wife, and introduced me to President Cleveland. He law which took effect on January 1. He law which took effect on January 1. He has in his custody an inventor whose resources and talents will surely relieve him from any anxiety on that score.

Clarence F. Tiear, who rejoices in the occasional possession of several other names, and a physique so diminutive as to permit of his crawling through a very small hole, has been for a quarter of a century astonishsurgical cabinet which has just been placed in the prison hospital. Dr. Sawyer, the a valuable apparatus, and says it is complete in every respect. The entire outfit is of the finest workmanship, and is contained appurtenances is a gastroscope, with an electric light for internal examinations. There is also a laryngoscope and a cautery handle, besides numerous other devices useful in the multiplicity of medical operations now carried on by the aid of electricity. Batteries for galvanic and faradic currents, or both sombined, are provided, and the black walnut case is really an example of multum in parvo. It would not be sur-prising to hear that Tiear had designs for an electrical chair which would meet approval. AN INTERESTING CHARACTER.

The reason for the free sway that is given to the little convict's invention by the prison authorities is found in his propensity for escaping when he has nothing else to do. He has been known to resign a steady job in the machine shops of the departed contract system for a precarious existence out-side, but as a general rule it has been en-forced idleness which has driven him out to seek employment. Such is the desire for his company, however, that he has an apart-ment near the headquarters of the guard, and receives every attention from his guardians. His mind is diverted in various ways from the thought that a small hole drilled out of an iron door, a few keys, a ladder, and a rope might be the means of carrying him to other friends.

Mr. Tiear's character is not devoid of humor. It is related of him that on one occasion he made a midnight tour through portions of Wayne and Oswego counties with a load of recently acquired furniture, which he distributed piecemeal at stated in-tervals. The horses and wagon, also fresh acquisitions, were disposed of to confiding

It was in 1862 that Tiear, as a boy of 12 years, entered the Western House of Refuge at Rochester. He is not much bigger now than he was when he attained distinction among the bad boys of Clyde. The Refuge life was not to his liking, and, observing that the dinners of the workmen employed in the erection of a new buildings were brought in, he one day picked up a dinner pail and walked out with the free children after the dinner hour. His father brought him back a week afterward. The youthful Jack Shepard "hid out" several times, but did not get away until regularly discharged on July 29, 1864. He returned within a haved so well that his father, upon removing to Iowa two years later, secured his re-lease. A few months later he forsook the Western farm, and shortly appeared at Monroe County Penitentiary under sen-tence of three years for robbing freight cars. Being occasionally sent on errands to a cellar commuicating with an outer court vard he improved the opportunity given to file off the lock. Donning a workman's over-alls and throwing an iron pulley on his shoulder, he represented himself as a workman from a city machine shop.

A CHECKERED CAREER. He walked to Rochester with a prison foreman who happened to be going the same way. When they separated he threw the pulley away. Six months later, in November, 1868, Oswego county sent him to the Refuge under the name of Charles Keith. He had risen to the dignity of a store bur-glar. Recognition by a fellow prisoner led to his serving out his unfinished term in the penitentiary. Then he returned to the village of Mexico, robbed the same store, was arrested, and again entered Oswego jail. He escaped, was recaptured, and would have escaped the second time but for timely discovery. Then he set the jail on fire, and tried to run out during the confusion. The jailor's wife, for whom he was only a good-sized handful, made this at-tempt a failure. A fourth trial proved suc-cessful, and "Slippery Charley" returned to business outside. Tiear was always as successful in getting into jail as in getting out, and was next ar-rested in Lockport for stealing a horse in Buffalo. On account of his youth and apparent innocence he got off with a light sentence to the Eric County Penitentiary. There he broke out of his cell and assaulted a watchman. He was sentenced to five years in Auburn for this, but parted com-pany with the Sheriff at Canandaigua, leav-ing that officer without ceremony. Transferring his attentions to Cayuga county horseflesh, he was lodged in the Auburn jail, from which he made two ineffectual attempts to escape. In March, 1880, Judge Day sentenced him to ten years in Auburn prison, which he is engaged in serving.

In November, 1882, Tiear drilled a square plate out of his cell door in the north wing, and was found at midnight picking the lock of the messroom door in the south wing. The lock was "mixed," and it was necessary to cut it off before breakfast was served. Principal Keeper Boyle, who has great confidence in Tiear's ability gave him the lock, and the convict finished the picking operation in a twinkling.

On February 16, 1884, Tiear achieved his greatest feat in escaping, although three days clapsed before he left the prison. He got a year of liberty by it. Committing some offense which would insure his confinement in the "jail," he was searched for tools and then left in solitary confinement. The jail is visited only at long intervals by the guards and by waiters with bread and water. Although stripped and put into a frush suit of clothes, Tiear managed to secrete saws upon his person. By the second night he had a hole in his door big enough to let him out into the corridor. to let him out into the corridor.

BACK TO THE BASTILE. When the guards came in to look at him he hid in a corner and stole out behind them. By the time they had reached his cell he had a good start down the prison yard. Badly aimed shots were fired, and one benumbed his right arm. Placing a leader sensing the wall he hid. The will be hid. one benumbed his right arm. Placing a ladder against the wall be hid. The wall was double guarded, but after the first night the guard was withdrawn. Tiear said afterward that his injured arm prevented his going over until three nights after. The ladder again against the wall and a rope on the outside showed the officers how he had fooled them. Prior to leaving Tiear robbed a prison contractor's office and safe and a prison contractor's office and safe, and stole a suit of clothing left hanging in a shop by a foreman. After this Tiear found employment among the skilled machinists of the Remington Works at Ilion. When he left Ilion he took with him a friend's wife and enough furniture to begin housekeeping in Syracuse. In February, 1884, a Syracuse detective recognized him and chased him. Tiear and the detective exchanged shots, but the little Jack Sheppard was at last run down in Senator Hiscock's grounds.

On June 22, 1887, Tiear "stowed away." Double guards patrolled the yard and walls for three nights. The inclosure was industriously searched for two days. On the third day (Sunday) the entire force of officers had just been detailed for what is known as the "general search," when Tiear, dusty, thirsty and hungry, rapped at the door of the keeper's hail. He said he knew he would be found, and didn't want to cause any more trouble. He was gladly welcomed, but was sent to the jail just the same. He is still inside, and when his sentence expires officers who have warrants for him will meet him at the prison gate.

Among Tiear's inventions is a combination lock which he defees anyone to pick, and which he couldn't pick himself without the combination; an electrical burglar alarm, which he knows how to circumvent,
